

THE BRERETONS OF IRELAND

One of the Irish Brereton Crests
a demi-unicorn, collared

INTRODUCTION

For many years I had been searching for my Brereton roots most likely because my father died when I was very young and with his death my links to my Brereton heritage were gone. I had been collecting information but it was the 2001 Brereton Reunion, in Cheshire, that forced me to complete a 'history' titled "In Search of My Family"; it was dedicated to my father, Albert Lionel Brereton who died in 1948.

During all the research and writing I had failed to find my Great-Great Grandparents, notwithstanding the records left behind by my Great Grandfather, Captain James Westropp Brereton, born in Dublin, Ireland. Over the past 8 years I have worked intermittently at solving this mystery - and I finally succeeded. His name was Doctor David Brereton of 12 York Street, Dublin, born circa 1808 and died in 1861. Records indicate that his wife was Margaret Brereton - no maiden name has been found to date. As I had gathered so much Irish history carrying out my quest I decided that I should prepare my version of an Irish history of the Breretons.

As always, in compiling family information, there are many people and sources to recognize for their contribution. I will start with thanking Anne who provided some of Patrick Montague Smiths genealogical research and the stories he had gathered while collecting his data. It was invaluable. Her 1977 thesis, titled 'A comparative Study of the Breretons of Wisconsin and the Breretons of South Africa their pedigrees and biographies' has once again provided a wealth of stories about various Brereton families

Patrick Montague-Smith, a genealogist, editor of Debrett's Peerage, and a Brereton on his mother's side had planned to write a book about the Brereton family. So, in the spring of 1948, letters and articles appeared in major newspapers throughout the British Empire and its former colonies appealing for information 'to help solve the mystery of the unclaimed title of Lord Brereton, Baron of Leighlin, created by King James I'. He received hundreds of letters and diaries and visits from Breretons hoping to discover where they fit into the Brereton lexicon. He was interested in biographies, life stories and reminiscences as well as pedigrees and over the years gathered volumes of information. To the best of my knowledge the book was never written; so I hope that by incorporating his research into this volume Patrick's work is not lost. I hope he would be pleased to see the information circulated to other Breretons.

In addition to Patrick's research, I researched numerous other Brereton histories, websites, Church records, data available on various Irish county and town data bases and much more. In the appendix I have included a listing of many of my sources, plus some extra data that others may wish to follow. I have also referenced the many sources and additional bits of information by adding footnotes to appropriate pages. At times it appears that the footnotes overtake the personal history. However, the alternative was to prepare an appendix of references, which I believe would have detracted from the stories.

In the Table of Contents you will find the various branches of the Brereton family that I have followed - and also the individuals who I have identified as belonging to each place name (i.e. Rathmore Breretons). It forms a type of family chart.

Within the 'book', family members have been identified by numbering the generation, e.g. 1) for first generation, 1.1) second generation, 1.1.1) third generation. Numbers are also used to identify those persons where additional information is provided.

Where there was sufficient information available, I linked the various families. There are also family groups for which I did not have enough information; perhaps someone will provide it to me after reading this history. I certainly look forward to adding to this document, and of course, making changes as required

Over the past 8 years I have gathered, edited and written about the Breretons of Ireland. At the beginning, given all the bits of information available the task of compiling a 'history' seemed not too daunting. However, as I worked through the various papers and records, making family charts as I went along, it became apparent that not all the family records agreed and so it became a much more time consuming and at times frustrating undertaking.

You will note that I have identified two family 'links' as being particularly contradictory: the ancestor of Henry and William Brereton who both married Blount women and Thomas Brereton of Dublin, of the Pennsylvania line. Based on a lot of research I believe that the family chart is accurate. I do hope you agree.

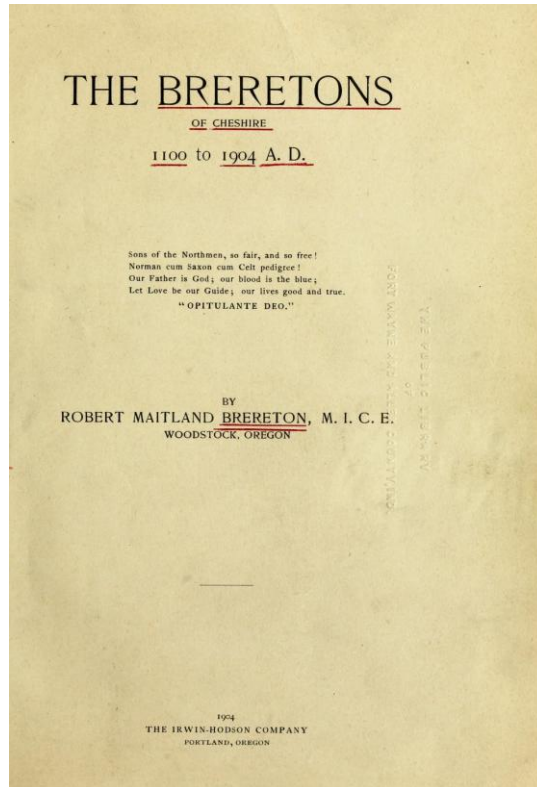

Consequently, while I have attempted at all times to validate the family link and information, it is very likely that corrections (in some cases just adding a date, or changing the spelling of a name) and perhaps realignments of family branches may be in order.

I look forward to hearing your views and comments as well as learning more of your history. Please do not alter this 'document' - but rather send me the information at bfbreton@yahoo.com and I will make the necessary changes and ensure that updated versions are available.

a) As many Brereton males attended Trinity College in Dublin, I have identified references to college in 'red' - of course in doing so it will cause the name to disappear if the document is printed without a coloured cartridge!

b) You will notice that some Breretons have a reference number which indicates their place on a Family Chart. My husband Bob methodically input all the Breretons data on a family chart (or rather a very large roll of paper), and it has been invaluable in searching for individuals and families as I went along. It will also act as a reference for further searches. Needless to say Bob was instrumental in my writing - thanks to his support, patience and - great editing skills.

INTRODUCTION (excerpt from book by Robert Maitland Brereton)

My object in writing the following history of this very ancient family, and in showing its pedigree from the time of the Norman conquest down to the present year of 1904, is that my children and grandchildren may, when I have passed over to the spirit life, keep in memory some interesting facts concerning their paternal ancestry, and also retain a kindly interest in their kinsfolk in the old country and in the old homes of their forefathers. I feel that it is good to take a wholesome pride in being able to trace, without any doubt, our genealogy for a period extending over seven hundred years of English history, and that of father to son consecutively. During this period history records many notable events: the mingling of the old Celtic, Saxon, and Norman blood in families: the evolution of the Anglo-Saxon race from barbarism into chivalry adopted to turbulent times, and from thence into the present age of a far nobler civilization, with a truer perception of the brotherhood and the fatherhood of man..... In England during the feudal period and down to the Seventeenth century there were royal herald's visitations and post-mortem inquisitions made (of or in) each county, for the special purpose of recording the genealogies of the living and deceased of all the families of barons, knights, and gentlemen with estates and grants of land which are found treasured in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, and in the Harleian Library in the British Museum, and from the old parish church registers of baptisms and burials, and also from the old tombs and monuments still existing in the old churches, which date back to the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, we are able, at the present time, to trace lineage.

The Brereton family, being one of these ancient and noble ones, and having also (according to Ormerrod's pedigree of the family) royal blood descent from the maternal side, which carries it back to Kenneth, first Celtic King of Scotland. A.D.850; and to Egbert, first Saxon King of all England: and to William the Conqueror's sister, Margaret, 1066; have had their pedigree especially recorded throughout the above mentioned ancient documents. Some of the leading members are mentioned in history as holding high offices in the courts of Henry VII, Henry VIII, Queen Elizabeth, James I, Charles I and Charles II.
